a recent report from the World Health Organisation found that most Africans don't drink. A lot of young people these days are fed up with the morning hangover, and have realized that you can have fun without the booze. ... Over six months after Nigeria banned popular small sachets and bottles of Nonalcoholic bars, also known as sober bars, are reshaping nightlife in New York City. Their rise comes as a result of the growing health consciousness among millennials. The bars are often found in urban areas, and are popular among young professionals. They offer a variety of non-alcoholic beverages, including flavored waters, mocktails, and craft sodas. The bars are also known for their social atmosphere, with live music and DJ sets. The rise of sober bars is a reflection of the changing attitudes towards alcohol consumption. As more people become health-conscious, they are looking for alternatives to traditional alcoholic drinks. Sober bars provide a social space where people can enjoy a drink without the negative effects of alcohol. This trend is expected to continue as the health and wellness industry grows.
